Statement

"This exhibition depicts my realistic impressions of the many varied landscapes of the Kansas prairie and the Rocky Mountains.

I would like the viewers of my paintings to feel my response to nature. Thus, I orchestrate the oil paintings rather than depict a literal view of my subject in the studio or in plein air. I am trying to communicate to the viewer what I feel about this scene before me; by taking the abundant information of the landscape that my eye sees and simplifying that into an emotional response. I am less interested in copying exactly what exists and more in organizing the painting into an intuitive response to how I feel about the subject matter. I am intrigued by the patterns and shapes in nature on the prairie and the peaks of mountains and concentrate on the effects of light on these elements.

My formal education of art started in high school with Art Instruction Schools, then attending Colby Community College and Fort Hays State University. Through the years my education has continued with repeatedly studying works of artists that I admire through reading and attending workshops of Clyde Aspevig, Wayne Wolfe and Howard Friedland. Besides my numerous art shows and rewards, becoming a Signature Member of the Oil Painters of America was one of the highlights to my career as an oil painter."
